Most people agree, the U.S. healthcare delivery system is broken. But it is not all bad news. One element of care delivery that is seeing exciting reinvention is networks, which are evolving from relatively straightforward mechanisms for directing patients and controlling costs to collaborative partnerships between payers and providers. In this webinar we will look at how the U.S. health delivery system has evolved and how workers' compensation networks can address some of the challenges group health networks face including financial challenges, provider administrative burdens, getting injured workers back to work, and how work comp networks are evolving to meet the needs of employers and patients.
