Ten Workers' Comp Specialty Services You Should Know More About

October 14, 2025

1 MIN READ

Recovering from an injury at work doesn't unfold in a straight line and specialized services are often needed to achieve the best possible outcome. Specialty services provide a breadth of products and services, ranging from durable medical equipment to diagnostics or physical medicine, to help injured employees get what they need, when they need it.

This on-point, on-time care is more important than ever. High-cost injuries account for a larger share of claims – and specialty services account for a significant share of this spending. Having the know-how to oversee specialty services requires expertise and when it's done right, these supports can be pivotal to workers' recoveries.

In our whitepaper, Ten Workers' Comp Specialty Services You Should Know More About, we break down what you need to know to make the best decisions for your injured employees and your workers' comp program.
